

Abstract

The π^0 signals produced at high rates at LHC and their decay to $\gamma\gamma$ are very challenging for low mass Higgs discovery. These have to be distinguished from single electromagnetic clusters. This requires sophisticated pattern recognition algorithms to be used. One such analysis is emphasized and its implications are discussed.