

Abstract

The status and some perspectives of the phenomenology of massive neutrinos is reviewed. I start with the phenomenology of neutrino oscillations in vacuum and summarize the results of neutrino experiments using solar, atmospheric, reactor and accelerator neutrino beams.